

JUSTICE GASKILL OF SUPERIOR COURT DIES SUDDENLY IN MAINE

Justice Francis Almon Gaskill of Worcester, a member of the Massachusetts Superior Court bench, died suddenly at his home in New York City, early in the morning of July 15. His death was the cause of his death was received at the bedside soon after the opening of court on July 15, and the justice at once arranged for appropriate action.

Judge Gaskill developed heart failure two years ago. Last fall it became so bad that he was forced to request a leave of absence from the bench. Since that time he has been working hard at various courts. A month ago he experienced a serious attack at Newburgh. He recovered and left that place for New York City.

Judge Gaskill was born in Blackstone, Mass., in 1846. He was the son of Albert and Anna (Comstock) Gaskill. He was educated in the public schools of the town and attended the Worcester Normal School. He was graduated from Brown University in 1869 and completed his law studies at the Harvard Law School. In 1869 he was admitted to the bar, and was associated with him, George B. Verry, Worcester until the latter's death. From that time on he continued the business himself until appointed a judge.

Worcester District Attorney. Judge Gaskill was a member of the Drive Sleepers off the Common.

There is to be no more rest for the weary at night on Boston Common. A crusade against sleeping on the benches has been begun by the police. The order applies to those who have houses, as well as to the homeless. Many who have homes and sleep in them because of the heat are more troubled by it than those who are used to sleeping on the benches.

Early today the police made their first round of the Common and drove off all the occupants of benches who were not in the company of law-abiding citizens.

The numbers of those who were not in the company of law-abiding citizens of the Common but a large number of them were regular frequenters of the Common, self-supporting men, whose habits are not pleasant to the majority, but who are used to sleeping on the benches.

CHOLERA FEST PLANNED FOR GYPSY MOTH

quite as subject to caterpillar cholera as the Asiatic variety.

Therefore, to get rid of the gypsy moth, all that is necessary is to set up in the midst of the colonies a full fledged band of caterpillar cholera epidemic. The result would soon be that of caterpillars crawling about as if they had their stomachs empty, crying for pain killer. As the gypsy moth has not been known to be a pest of the United States, it is safe to keep down the death rate there would be no harm for its little caterpillars.

It is not necessary to go far from the test in the grounds of the Bussey in England, to find the caterpillars of the pest. First he generates the disease in a bunch of young caterpillars by feeding them of a certain kind of food, and then he observes the effects of their eating he plants them out where the foliage. Naturally, the house-raised caterpillars rush up to his new food, and the result is a full fledged epidemic of the good things that the laboratory knows how to prepare.

It is not to be finally about going out into the world to feed. While the result is in the hands of the caterpillars, it is in the hands of the caterpillars, and that is the beginning of its final.

PAWTOCKET, July 18.—Robert Rogers, superintendent of the Burgess cotton mills, a plant valued at $1,000,000, has just resigned and that fact has caused big stir in textile circles throughout Rhode Island. He is going to be superintendent of the world's main lines in East Boston, which will cost, it is understood, $5,000,000. The project is being handled by the company which Eugene N. Fox is president.

Mr. Burgess is regarded as one of the best cotton manufacturers in this world. It was understood that he and others were to build a new plant here which would cost $10,000,000. The proposed new plant, however, says that his going to East Boston will not prevent the execution of the plan. It is understood that he is considering whether the departure of Mr. Burgess is a part of a great cotton industry development plan which is a surprise to the public. The proposed new plant (truck plant).

Mental Faults Eliminated by Steady Trying

By ELNA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1906, by American Journal Company

A GIFTED and cultured man complains that the nature he has "just" that he is in the way of every meeting any standard of civility which will satisfy his own desire on the expenditure of his friends.

"I am cured with a dual nature," he says. "There is a good angel within me, holding me to strictness of the highest, and then the wild, heady, gutting me down into the dust and leaving me with few friends."

Another intelligent acquaintance, a woman, answers me that we cannot change our nature. "We must live as we are," she asserts, "on the plane where we belong, doing the best we can with the inherited traits given us. I am born with a jealous nature," she further declares. "I know life is in the struggle, and I lose my friends by it, but of course we cannot change our nature."

What absolute nonsense! What the artist does with technique, day, slaying it into marvelous beauty, we can do with our own classic nature.

What the artist does with the machine, clipping and measuring and following a given design, we can do with our characters, making them the image of our own.

Man Can Train Mind and Body

The hardest human voice can be trained by constant study and practice into an expression of the highest harmony. The body can be trained to perform feats of motion upon the trapeze or tight rope; the athlete who begins to train his muscles and lifts little weights under a strict regimen of his life.

What can be done by the physical man he does in trifling ratio by the mental and spiritual man.

Quick temper and irritability can be controlled and eliminated. Rapid time the word is uttered and the servant who obeys is a step ahead in the future and present advantage.

Thoughts are the result of willfulness and wounded vanity. They do not indicate any of our nature, people, nature. But themselves, some of the most useless things I have ever known were usually jealous.

A little time of self-analysis each day, a sober realization of the waste of life and its opportunities for happiness by indulging in jealous nature, will help any intelligent man to overcome the fault, to prevent injury and a deep desire to be better in his nature.

Strong passions and appetites can be tamed in the flesh if we cut out the higher part of our mental and spiritual nature. We must use every natural, natural law and power of the mind and body to bring the mind and body to a state of control.
